PRESS RELEASE

The Voice Inc. Empowering Youth Through University Leadership Programs

Applications for Leadership Development Program (LDP) now open

This week's orientation program at the University of Papua New Guinea has allowed local non-government organization The Voice Inc. to showcase the work that it has been doing with young people at the university through its leadership programs.

The Voice Inc. is a dynamic youth development organisation based in PNG that runs leadership programs with students in schools and universities. The programs aim to build a sense of purpose in the student's lives, increase their confidence and create avenues for them to contribute to their communities through projects.

In a session for first year students participating in orientation week yesterday, The Voice Inc. spoke about their programs and held a panel session with alumni of one its programs, the Leadership Development Program (LDP).

The panel discussion featured four program participants (pictured); Brian Sasingian, Jerome Sesga, Stephannie Kirriwom and Sebangaz Siming. These four were able to share their experiences with the program and encouraged new students to become involved.

In speaking about the benefits of being involved with The Voice's leadership programmes, Stephannie Kirriwom said, "The Voice believes in you, until you believe in yourself."

The Voice Inc. is now accepting applications for the 2014 Leadership Development Program, which is its principle leadership program. In line with the vision of The Voice Inc., the LDP aims to build young leaders that are driven by purpose and are confident in the value of their contribution to their community, their nation and the world.

LDP is run through the recently established Center for Leadership at the University of Papua New Guinea (UPNG) and another about to be established at the PNG University of Technology (PNGUOT). Applications for the program are open to all first year students at UPNG in Port Moresby and PNGUOT in Lae.
